

ABSTRACT

To detect contaminants on turbine components of a turbine, at least one current oscillation characteristic value of at least one turbine component is determined. Said value is preferably compared to an oscillation reference value. This permits contaminants to be detected, as the weight of the latter modifies the oscillation characteristic value of the turbine component.